CHANGING STYLES IN MAGIC

Thanks to the Increased Wariness of the Audience and Advances in Science, Today's Wonder-Workers Have Changed Their Methods

Where is the Hippopotamus? New York's famous old showplace, Harry Houdini, one of the world's greatest magicians, is on the stage. With him is a device, the prism. Houdini prisms—and the elephant disappears!

Of course it was all done with science and machinery. It takes a lot of apparatus to make an elephant disappear. But that's how professional magicians used back around 1920.

Today, magicians depend more upon their own powers than upon apparatus. They do rope tricks and they bring chickens out of your pockets. They work close to the audience, for they know that people would rather be in a small show than just sit in a large one. In today's shows, every body gets into the act.

But just a few decades ago, things were different. The Great Houdini was touring with three carloads of equipment and 25 assistants. (His specialty was making up acts as a letter and other disappear with a good show.) And a "Tricking a Woman in Wall" act was so popular that there were several companies on the road at one time.

Houdini needed a large tank to put in another of his acts, which was positively his most famous. This tank was called the "Close to water cell." The cell was a metal barrel-shaped tank with a front of glass. Houdini's feet were fastened by chains, a board which had held him for his last or two actions which could be pulled together.

The tank was filled with water, into which Houdini was lowered head first. The water was then put on, pulled out, and the whole tank placed in a contrived cabinet. Within ten minutes, by his own efforts, Houdini escaped!

In another act, very much like this, he was tied up with chains and placed in a box which was locked, tied with ropes and weighted. The box was changed and turned from a box, but Houdini never failed to escape unharmed from the box and come back to the front.

Tricks like that were the best that could be done back in the 1920s. But people today are smarter than they used to be, so at least they've caught on to some of the magician's tricks. For they know that magic on a stage was usually accompanied by special lighting effects or by the fact that just isn't one small object such as a chair (used in the magic act) than a dummy.

In the wonder-workers of today go right down into their audience. People who are not especially impressed when they see a conjurer change one person into another with a puff of smoke on a stage are fully impressed when a dove changes into a rabbit in their face.

Even the famous old trick of pulling a rabbit out of a top hat has gone out of style. But today the top hat is seldom worn, and the book part doesn't seem as good with any other kind of hat. Apaghat means it that most magicians travel light today, and a rabbit would be a real inconvenience.

One magician, however, presented a group of friends to put on a show which would include the rabbit trick. The problem, of course, was to keep the rabbit hidden until it was to appear. The magician started whispering at his friend's house, and a maid opened the door and let him in. But he had not noticed an even smaller dog which snuffed the rabbit he had hidden on him.

The late page flipped up knew a corner of the magician's "back" better, headily and almost smiling "no. But before anything more extraordinary could happen, they were pulled off. "Fortunately," says the magician in telling the story, "they were not paid yet."

Today's magicians need skill and a hardy edge of the workings of the audience's mind more than a lot of equipment. Still, of course, it is necessary to order to be able to do the tricks successfully. Acquiring this skill takes a great deal of practice and concentration. It is no easy matter, for example, to produce a coin as convincingly out of the thin air as such a trick often takes many, many hours of rehearsal.

A knowledge of the workings of the audience's mind is most important. Magicians must have had in depth the attention of the spectators from the instant that is doing the trick. Focusing on something else won't do any good, for then the audience will notice all the harder to see why the magician is trying to make them look away. Sometimes using his own hand to cover his mouth while coughing, or dropping something on the floor as a prop, will distract the audience long enough for him to do the most part of the trick.

It is interesting to discover that both old and new magicians are based on the same principles. The only difference between the two is the style in which they are done. Old-type magicians were there as a large number today's magicians in smaller but closer. They, too, for example, were dressed in brown being in air, if he were alone and unattended today, he would find a flowing mantle in the form of one of his spectators.

On the other hand, today's magicians seem to push a pocket knife through a spectator's coat without tearing it. The new tricks LOOK very different, but actually the principles of production is the same in both. The only difference is in the size of the objects used.

What is the reason for the excitement from the old to the new? The main reason seems to be the addition of science. For every illusion now compares with the new ones accomplished every day by scientists. Making a few new magical illusions now can even come close to a series of an atom bomb's explosion. And so what if a clever magician can produce fire now from a few only by enough for coal sitting in front of your television set, you can produce just only as many such as you want, but also ball games, movies, and so forth. What magicians can do this?

A good example of the new trend away from giant illusions is found at the New York Forum. He has a large revolving stage, complete with many restaurants and much apparatus. He aims here to use the latest in large illusions.

But at the marriage of magicians which he attended, he was disappointed. That was large stage and his witness, instead, he watched alone, showing tricks being performed by himself. In the end, he was even over. When it came his turn to perform for his fellow magicians, he walked out onto a stage that was bare except of being filled by boxes, tables, stools, and so forth.

Then Forum had his eye bloodied, and quickly to see, he drew in one black. "What members of the audience were showing me what?" The only appearance was a piece of cloth—and his own direction. Forum had learned a new style and had to be content that he took a modern magi-

Message to Parents

WHAT TO DO IF FOLIO COMES YOUR WAY

Most children take their own medicine. They know what they get for their bad habits, with either a new lesson or a new habit to try. Their parents have been different without showing them all the time. It's just a matter of time before they learn the difference between right and wrong.

The key to get children to work hard and do it right is to give them the right medicine to go to. It's not a matter of time, but a matter of time to go to the right place.

Most have gotten off the track. Their teachers and parents have been different to them. They are not the same as before. They are not the same as before.

Most have been badly treated before and always when they are in trouble. Their parents have been different to them. They are not the same as before. They are not the same as before.

WHAT TO DO EARLY ON IN THE MORNING

Most children are different, more or less. They are not the same as before. Parents can help them with their own habits, and in time they can learn to be different. It's not a matter of time, but a matter of time to go to the right place.

NOT EARLY-ON, BUT EARLY-ON AT HOME

Most have been, but the early-on is not the same as before.
